Background

Every five years, LMC’s Research Office conducts a study on the opinions of LMC students on various college issues to determine the progress of the institution. A survey (Appendix A) was constructed and sent to faculty to administer it to students in class during a two week period after the fifth week of instruction in fall 2006. The topics the survey covered are organized in this report in seven major sections: In section I information about students is provided. Section II is about Student Experiences with Faculty and the Learning Environment; in Section III, students are asked about the experiences with Services to Students; Section IV is about Self-Perceived College Impact; Section V is about Social Respect and Diversity, Section VI is about Self-Perceived College Impact; and lastly section VII is about Overall Experiences with College. The results are use in the identification of potential student needs, understanding the climate students experience, and responding to the accreditation review.

The Sample: A stratified sample of 40 courses (controlling for discipline, time of day and day of the week), yielded a sample size of 282 students. The sample reflects well the college population (Table 1), therefore, making it possible to generalize the findings.

Please indicate the extent to which you agree or disagree with the following statements about instructors.

Student-Faculty Interaction: Student-faculty contact has been found to be a key factor in the life of college students, particularly if the contacts are academic related. More than half of the students indicated to have contact with faculty outside the classroom: 59% indicated that they have met with faculty to discuss intellectual or course related matters; 40% of the students met with faculty to discuss matters related to their future career. The average contact between students and faculty for purposes of discussing intellectual or course related matters is 3.4 meetings. Students are less likely to meet with faculty to discuss informally events occurring in our society.

How many times have you met (contacts of 10 minutes or more) with at least one faculty member outside the classroom for the following purposes?

Purpose of Meetings with Faculty	Number of Times	%	Average Number of Meetings
a. to discuss matters related to your future career	114	40%	2.9
b. to discuss intellectual or course-related matters	166	59%	3.4
c. to talk informally about events occurring in society	78	27%	3.1

LMC Courses and Programs: Students’ opinions regarding LMC Courses and Programs were positive. About four fifths of the students agreed (80%) that the courses at LMC are a) of high quality, b) have helped them achieve their goals and c) have made them more academically prepared. Also, the information students have received about the courses has been accurate. Close to three quarters of the students (71%) agreed that LMC offers high quality programs. Although most students had positive opinions about the courses and programs, it is important to note that 15% or more of the students had NO OPINION to these five questions.
